Q: Choose a fake ID document? I am applying for a US visa for a conference, and i have the following options: international driver license (issued by a USA consulate in my country) US driver license US passport State ID card Identity documentation doesn't have to be authentic; I'll just have to show that the images on it actually belong to me. Most of the above options are 1-page ID cards that you can print yourself. My question is about the fake ID (1-page, not printed, me having to photograph and sign it): is it less suspicious than a passport, passport card, or state ID? A: First, all of them are bad, but if you are planning to stay in a hotel for a few days and you will not be leaving your room, then I would go for the passport (or passport card, if you have one) as it is the easiest to explain in a few words and you won't need to make an ID card to make a hotel reservation. The proliferation of electronic devices has led to a rapid increase in the need for portable charging cords. There are a number of conventional portable charging cords available on the market and they have a variety of drawbacks and disadvantages that include: (1) they are very large, which is problematic for many individuals, such as those with motor or other disabilities; (2) they are not universal, meaning they only charge compatible devices; and (3) they are not intuitive, which makes it difficult for individuals to use them. Most importantly, none of the conventional portable charging cords are rechargeable, so they must be frequently replaced if not used for a prolonged amount of time. In addition, users have other requirements for their cables that include: (1) a cable should be flexible enough to be used comfortably as users move about; (2) a cable should be able to attach easily to a wide variety of connectors, such as different sizes and types of electrical outlets or plugs; and (3) a cable should be durable. Accordingly, a need exists for a portable charging cable that is light weight, flexible, universal, intuitive, and has a rechargeable capability. order to comply with the court's "serious offender" determination. The Supreme Court explained that while "[d]iscretionary departures must be individually justified," "probation departs on a class basis by operation of law." (Emphasis added.) 43
