Benefit and cost-effectiveness of an early invasive strategy for acute pulmonary embolism. Determination of the optimal clinical practice guidelines for early invasive management of acute pulmonary embolism (PE) remains controversial. We used the most recently available evidence to determine whether a clinical approach of immediate initiation of anticoagulation and early invasive treatment (group 1) reduces mortality from PE and is cost-effective relative to a "wait and see" strategy (group 2). We searched MEDLINE to identify all randomized controlled trials published from 1990 to 2004 (following the Preferred Reporting Items for Systematic Reviews and Meta-Analyses) comparing an early invasive versus a conservative strategy for patients with a high pretest probability of acute PE. Our search was not restricted by language, year of publication, or publication status. We assessed quality of evidence using an adapted version of the Grades of Recommendation, Assessment, Development, and Evaluation (GRADE) approach. Studies were selected for inclusion in the meta-analysis if they met the following criteria: (1) randomized, (2) controlled, (3) assessed the timing of anticoagulation or the use of an invasive strategy in patients with acute PE, (4) compared an invasive strategy with a noninvasive strategy, and (5) compared a strategy of immediate anticoagulation and an early invasive strategy in patients with acute PE. A cost-utility analysis was performed for all studies meeting the criteria for the primary outcome. We identified nine randomized controlled trials (2,293 patients with acute PE) comparing early invasive with a conservative strategy. Patients in the invasive group received more frequently intravenous heparin and blood products (57% vs 29%, respectively). Compared with patients in the conservative strategy, mortality was reduced by 23% (odds ratio [OR] = 0.77, 95% confidence interval [CI]: 0.66, 0.90). The rate of recurrent venous thromboembolism (VTE) was higher with a conservative strategy (OR = 1.41, 95% CI: 1.10, 1.82). The incremental cost-effectiveness ratio was $3,284 per quality-adjusted life-years (QALY). Probabilistic sensitivity analysis showed that the probability of a cost-effective strategy ranged from 48% to 75%. One trial (1,154 patients) compared an early invasive with an early noninvasive strategy. Mortality was reduced by 25% (OR = 0.75, 95%
