Police said six people were arrested after Thursday's standoff. The five men were detained for "committing an offence," while the woman was arrested "for inciting the commission of offences." A police statement did not name any of the people arrested. The barricade was started at around 2.30pm on Wednesday, after hundreds of people had gathered in anticipation for the arrival of a tourist bus. A police officer told media that students from the University of the West Indies were among those blocking parliament. "The actions of these protesters are, of course, illegal as they are being done on the premises of parliament," police said in a statement. "However, it has come to police's attention that some of the protesters are known to be associated with the Barbados Labor Party." "Police would like to caution that by leaving parliament, they are breaking the law and are risking being charged with an offence," police said. In the capital St George, a man suffered minor injuries after being hit by a car. But police later said that "the injuries were not serious." The people arrested will be charged as early as Thursday. The Barbados Labor Party, the country's main opposition party, accused Prime Minister Freundel Stuart on Wednesday of disrespecting the house of parliament. Protestor Rose Tavares said she joined protests against the government's "failed" response to unemployment. "We thought it was necessary, and we
