The minimum width is determined by the condition that a single clump is generated within  $\alpha$  and the maximum is a result of the requirement that  $\alpha_i$  does not make any portion of the  $\alpha$  intersecting. 5. [\*Final Phase\*] (optional) - After the final phase, the arc sweep routine proceeds to step 2. The arc center is determined for the next arc sweep by comparing the accumulated  $F$  values with  $2\alpha_*$  and the arc angular width is set using condition 4. The results are shown in Table \{tab:vs\}.

Severe, life-threatening sepsis, a rapidly fatal inflammation of the body that is often caused by a bacterial infection, is the leading cause of death in the Intensive Care Unit (ICU). Despite extensive research, sepsis remains the leading cause of mortality in the U.S. ICUs, affecting 100,000 Americans each year. In 2001, the National Institutes of Health launched the Pathways to Improve Outcomes in Infections in the ICU (PilotICU) trial to test a system of care designed to improve survival from sepsis. The PilotICU is a large, multisite, randomized controlled trial, testing whether a care bundle including early recognition and care-planning, a test to rapidly diagnose infection, and implementation of a protocol for early antibiotics could improve survival from sepsis. Given the size and complexity of the PilotICU trial, it will be costly to complete and require considerable resource allocation. This paper describes a series of pilot activities that will allow investigators to test the feasibility of implementing various components of the PilotICU trial. These activities include engagement of key stakeholders, a detailed assessment of current practice regarding evidence-based practices, piloting of study tools, and evaluation of the effectiveness of the pilot in answering questions about implementation feasibility.In vitro activity of dirithromycin (A-56268).
