Strain-dependent effects of ^{22}Na -citrate in isolated perfused hearts. The intra-cellular acid-base status and the accumulation of $^{22}\text{Na}^{+}$ during incubation in Krebs-Henseleit (K-H) solution with 7 mM $[\text{Na}^{+}]_o$, 30 mM $[\text{citrate}]_o$ were studied in Langendorff-perfused hearts from two inbred rat strains, the Wistar and Fisher 344, during acid load (pH 7.15-6.85) or alkalosis (pH 7.85-7.5). In both strains, citrate accumulation and pH changes were smaller during acid load and greater during alkalosis than under control conditions. The Wistar strain showed a greater sensitivity to external pH changes than the Fisher 344 strain. The differences in the effects of acid load and alkalosis between the two strains might be due to their different expression of the electrogenic $\text{Na}^{+}/\text{HCO}_3^{-}$ transporter, the $\text{Na}^{+}/\text{HCO}_3^{-}$ cotransporter (NBCe). In both strains, external acidosis increased efflux of $^{22}\text{Na}^{+}$ from the heart as compared to control. Internal acidification strongly reduced efflux of $^{22}\text{Na}^{+}$ from the heart of the Wistar strain, whereas internal alkalosis increased efflux of $^{22}\text{Na}^{+}$ from the heart of the Fisher 344 strain. Thus the accumulation of citrate during incubation in K-H solution with 7 mM $[\text{Na}^{+}]_o$, 30 mM $[\text{citrate}]_o$ is related to the expression of the NBCe. The $\text{Na}^{+}/\text{HCO}_3^{-}$ cotransporter may thus be important for the export of citrate and cellular acidosis.

Role of the alpha-chain of mouse interleukin-2 receptor in transducing signals that trigger cell growth. We have found that transfected mouse IL-2R alpha-chain (mIL-2R alpha) potentiates growth factor-dependent cell proliferation, but it does not signal growth itself. However, a chimeric gene consisting of the cytoplasmic domain of the murine IL-2R alpha-chain linked to the transmembrane and extracellular domain of the human IL-2R beta-chain signal in both growth factor-independent and -dependent cell growth. These data indicate that the cytoplasmic domain of the murine IL-2R alpha-chain is important for the growth-promoting signal transduction and, therefore, for maintaining homeostasis.
