Data Sets: There's a lot of ocean processes that we don't understand. But by building observatories and putting instruments on them, the ocean observatories have been trying to figure out the ocean processes. David: By instruments, I'm really talking about things like Argo – we have an array of floats that have been measuring temperature and salinity of the water. We've had a lot of instruments over the years that have been measuring the surface wind, including the most famous, which is the wind profiler. The first
