Source: reticuloendothelial and osteoblastic responses to bone grafting. Histologic features and changes at grafting sites with and without simultaneous oral antibiotic therapy. Resorption and new bone formation were histologically investigated after the insertion of an autogenous graft in rabbit tibia and femur. Three different groups were studied: (1) with 0.5 mg/kg of an antibiotic for 7 days, (2) without any antibiotic, and (3) without any antibiotic or antibiotic. There were no significant differences in the reticuloendothelial and osteoblast responses among the three groups with the graft being inserted at the distal femur. However, in the groups receiving the graft at the distal tibia, there was a significant increase in the percentage of reticuloendothelial cells in the group with oral antibiotic.
