In the video above, EA SPORTS senior producer Dan O'Brien talks with EA SPORTS community creators on the FUT Club, details the benefits of "HyperMotion Technology," and speaks to the impact it has had on FIFA 20 gameplay in terms of ball physics. Dan O'Brien (PRO): Thanks for having me. WingsOverWales: Welcome to the studio. Dan: Thanks. WingsOverWales: You've obviously been playing a lot of FIFA lately, and you've been working on all the new features in this year's game. What's the biggest difference you've seen between FIFA 20 and FIFA 21? Dan: The most obvious difference is the new ball physics. WingsOverWales: I was wondering if there was going to be a drastic change or... Dan: You were? Well, what we can say is it isn't a dropoff between FIFA 21 and 20 because the ball is very different. It's very bouncy, more erratic, and the flight of the ball is improved compared to FIFA 20. WingsOverWales: So, the feeling on the ground is that the ball is a little bit more accurate? Dan: That's right. WingsOverWales: So, the ball is a lot more responsive in Fifa 22 Serial Key? Dan: It's actually a little bit more responsive than FIFA 20 to certain types of plays. WingsOverWales: What about the hits? Dan: They're a little bit more responsive. WingsOverWales: The hits really are. I think I actually hit the ball a lot more. Dan: There are some new physics related to the hits. It's a little more unpredictable. It's been tuned a little differently. When you receive a hit, it's actually more aggressive and unpredictable because it's a little bit more vital. WingsOverWales: I heard you guys really worked on the player animations and player interaction. What did you do to the player interaction this year? Dan: The one thing that people expect and notice is the speed of the players has improved. You'll notice, especially in the backline, the speed of the players, especially in the last

Motion-capture data is used to gain a more realistic feeling and feeling of control in FIFA 22, allowing players to gain a better understanding of their team's strengths and their opponents' weaknesses. "Micro-decisions" within a game can now be more accurately created for players, helping them interpret the game and make better decisions. The team behind FIFA, EA SPORTS, used this data to make a number of significant gameplay tweaks, such as improving how the ball spins and cutting of moves. EA SPORTS' Director of Gameplay & Control Gavin Sinclair explains, "we used to look at all the shots we wanted to make and we'd split them into categories such as drag, cut, spin and overhead, but with our new system that gives us much more control and assists our game designers with making a realistic cut of the ball. It's really going to make a significant impact to the game." More player attributes are being updated in FIFA to make players more realistic. For example, FIFA Player Intelligence now allows players to react to passes and crosses based on previous passes. They can use the body-shapes of opponents to use intelligently, for example, or react to runs or passes more quickly, by cutting off the pass. Players can also respond to players out of position, slowing down the pass attempt. The Player Motion System for FIFA 22 is also being enhanced. In FIFA 19, the Crouch & Sneaky Switch Mid Screenplay was easy to perform. In FIFA 20, there was an easier way to perform the Running Crouch and Sneaky Attacking Mid Screenplay, and one of the key ingredients to the success of these actions was the timed running system. In FIFA 22, players can perform these actions with much more accuracy and pace, making them more difficult to deal with. One of the most significant gameplay tweaks being made in FIFA 22 is the new one-on-one AI. The one-on-one AI in FIFA 20 was a significant improvement over the previous versions, but it could still play erratically at times, particularly when players were going for one-on-ones. In FIFA 22, the one-on-one AI has been enhanced to make the game more fair for both teams. Players will now place themselves into better positions at set-pieces, and they will be much better at positioning themselves when going for one-on-ones. The physics engine powering FIFA is also getting a boost in FIFA 22
