Using PowerShell, how can I get the service name for all Services? For example, I have services: [Microsoft.Services.Disk] [MSFT.Windows.Services.ExchangeServices.0] [MSFT.Windows.Services.GroupPolicy] [MSFT.Windows.Services.Network] [MSFT.Windows.Services.RemoteAccessConnection] [MSFT.Windows.Services.RemoteDesktopConnection] [MSFT.Windows.Services.SRVSvc] [MSFT.Windows.Services.WLAN] [MSFT.Windows.Services.WFP] The order is not important. A: This is the simplest way I can think of, and it does not require the service name to be known: Get-Service -ComputerName. However, if you know that all service names are of the form "SERVICE1" (or whatever you want them to be), you can filter the results by doing: Get-Service -ComputerName. -Name SERVICE A: As Marc said you could do a Get-Service with no parameters and it would return everything which is actually all the services, so you could do a filter like this: Get-Service -ComputerName. | Select-Object Name, Status If you have a list of services you want, you could do it like this: Get-Service -ComputerName. | Where-Object Name -In ('newspaper','windowsphone','windowsupdate') Otherwise if you have a list of Service names you want, you could do it like this: Get-Service -ComputerName. | Where-Object { $_.name -in @('newspaper','windowsphone','windowsupdate')} Secrets at the heart of beautiful Brisbane homes. But these days, they're seeing cases where the virus causes liver failure and some death, especially among adults. "The majority of the deaths associated with hepatitis A in the United States have occurred in adults," said Dr. Rachel Ballem, a senior epidemiologist at the CDC in Atlanta. Four times in the last two years, in Atlanta and Dallas, Texas, liver failure and death has been associated with the disease, she said. The CDC is monitoring two clusters in those cities and has found some links between the cases, such as exposure to a food place or a public place. Many of the cases are adults, she added, though younger kids have also been affected. "Young children can get pretty sick and die from hepatitis A," she said. In 2015, in Houston, Texas, six deaths and more than 50 infections were associated with a hepatitis A outbreak traced to one person, she said. In a report published in the journal Vaccine, researchers said their investigation shows that "if extensive control efforts are not performed" in areas with limited access to safe and reliable food and water, "epidemics of this infectious disease will continue to occur and can have severe consequences." Typically, a vaccine is available for hepatitis A, but not in every country. "In some countries, for example, it's not even part of the schedule," Ballem said. "People have to pay out of pocket to get the vaccine." "We're not vaccinating every child in the United States at this point, but the situation is rapidly changing," she said. About a decade ago, hepatitis A used to be a problem in the U.S. but cases have dropped. It's no longer a common problem, she said, though that doesn't mean it's going away,
