Source: Source: China's Socialist mega city, the buildings all have screens on their windows to protect against air pollution. Sometimes, if the air quality is really bad, the windows would stay closed — and there would be nothing to see in the city. A new video by china.org.cn shows just how dark and deserted it can be during its worst pollution days — and the consequences of not wearing a mask. If you live in China, you might assume that public spaces are open to people of all ages — but in reality, there are many places where young people, foreigners, or just anyone who is of any gender can be told they're not allowed to go in. Want to show your support for free speech in Hong Kong by reading out the names of the 17 people barred from entering a Hong Kong restaurant? So it's no wonder that British bodyguard Thomas Cook, which is the biggest travel firm in Europe, is asking customers to share their hopes and fears for the future of the city as the political crisis continues. The firm has identified the 10 most important issues it's being asked for help with, ranging from the concept of "one country, two systems", through to food hygiene. For example, fears about demonstrations are high among its Chinese customers, who are concerned that they may be arrested or injured on the grounds that they are showing "disrespect" to the Hong Kong government. There is also a special section for those who are most concerned about the food they consume, with UK customers specifically worried about where their food and drinks come from. Another concern is how much money people will spend once tourists decide to return to the city. "We have a number of clients who are worried about whether they will find the same or similar discounts to be available," said Thomas Cook spokesperson Simon Murray. "Others are concerned about whether they will be able to find basic commodities like bread, milk and eggs and are putting more store into what they buy.💎"

Neuropeptide Y inhibits prolactin (PRL) release from the anterior pituitary of the male rat in vitro by stimulating the phosphoinositol system. Neuropeptide Y (NPY) is present in many brain and peripheral tissues and is known to regulate a wide range of physiological functions. The aim of the present study was to investigate the effects of NPY in the anterior pituitary, a key hormonal regulatory tissue. In the anterior pituitary culture, NPY inhibited PRL release, and the maximal inhibitory effect (IC(50)) of 1-100 nmol/l NPY on PRL release was 40.1 +/- 5.2% (mean +/- SEM). The inhibitory effect of NPY was dose dependent. The concentration of PRL in the medium of control cultures increased during the culture period, with a peak at 18 h. After addition of 10 nmol/l NPY for 6 h, PRL concentrations in the medium were significantly lower than in control cultures. This effect was more pronounced at 100 nmol/l NPY. This concentration did not affect cell viability and cell number in culture. Furthermore, the 3-h treatment of anterior pituitary cells with NPY enhanced the release of intracellular Ca(2+) in a dose-dependent manner. Pretreatment of cells with W-7 (an inhibitor of calmodulin kinase II) decreased the effect of NPY. The phosphorylation of calmodulin and the concentration of phospho-calmodulin did not change after incubation with NPY. The inhibitory effect of NPY was blocked by pertussis toxin. The inhibition of PRL

VR Robonauts VR is a reality game for the Windows and Apple platforms in which players control the Robonaut 2 Spacecraft through an innovative reference "Robonaut MMO style gameplay", technically known as Reality Overlay Modification engine (ROM). The player and Robonaut fights against AI tasks in environment and mission specific competitions. The player aims to get gold coins from each mission. Earned gold is used to train Robonaut in new skills such as new arm moving or new tasks. Robonauts and its game engine are an Intellectual Property of Bandai Namco Studios Europe GmbH. Robonaut The Robonaut space suit is a fictional space suit developed by Astronauts Inc., an elastic garment made of 5 or 6 layers allowing freedom in motion. The Robonaut was designed as "a tool for doing science with serious possibilities. The Robonaut is a working robot, but not an insectoid robot (BEBOP) or robotic biologist (Robobreaker). His appearance was inspired by the Robo-Bee SPORtronic Suit (SPSS) and the Robonaut-3 (Robonaut 3) suit that have been shown at the Expo 2000. A VNR (Virtual Reality Helmet) connects the Suit to the Robonaut-01. The Robonaut is a humanoid bipedal robot with particular mass distribution on the frame, offered by Japanese electronics giant Sony. In an episode of DJMax the robot provided futuristic vision for his space flight. He is mentioned in the first scene of the movie Moon when the characters are dancing to "I Am Your Gadget". Without a VNR (Virtual Reality Helmet), the Robonaut suits are used for space exploration together with humans. The Robonaut-01 is equipped with a 3D vision system, hands, and cameras. During the construction of the Robonaut-01, Astronaut Inc. has developed robotic arms with special dexterity. All these functions are delivered by the Robonaut-01 Space suit integrated by the Robonaut-02 modular robotic head equipped with two visor cameras. Together, the Robonaut suits may provide a
