I'm writing a component that returns a RenderProps, and my functions can return any type of RenderProps (a common pattern for components). This: pub trait RenderProps { type Props; type SlotProps; type SynapseProps; } pub struct DrawFn> { pub fn draw_fn(&mut self, synapse: &Synapse) -> Self::Props { unimplemented!() } } pub struct RenderProps> { fn render_fn(&mut self, synapse: &Synapse) -> Self::Props { unimplemented!() } } impl> RenderProps for R { type Props = R::Props; type SlotProps = R::SlotProps; type SynapseProps = R::SynapseProps; } is illegal. I don't want to have to write implement RenderProps for every specific return type I want to build, so is there any way to say to the compiler that R is the same as all the types that have a RenderProps
