Two of the chloroacetanilide herbicides are generally used in maize production: alachlor, a broad-spectrum herbicide, and metolachlor, a selective broad-spectrum herbicide. The objective of this work was to compare the toxicity of these herbicides to the photosynthetic processes and growth of the leaves of maize seedlings. The herbicides were applied at two concentrations (3.2 and 9.6 g ae ha<sup>-1</sup>). The inhibition of photosynthetic electron transport was induced at a lower concentration of alachlor (0.2 microg ae per leaf) than that of metolachlor (1.0 microg ae per leaf). In contrast, the inhibition of plant growth was observed only at the high concentration of alachlor (1.2 microg ae per leaf) or metolachlor (2.0 microg ae per leaf). Both herbicides inhibited photosynthesis. Chlorophyll concentration was not affected by alachlor or metolachlor. Inhibition of light-induced electron transport (LET) by metolachlor was more severe than that by alachlor. However, the herbicides inhibited the photophosphorylation process at the same extent. At a high concentration, chloroacetanilides slowed down the swelling process to a similar extent as the herbicides inhibiting LET. It was concluded that leaf growth is more sensitive than photosynthetic processes to the toxicity of chloroacetanilide herbicides and that, under field conditions, high doses of both herbicides can cause reduced growth of maize leaves.Living with your child's diagnosis A lot of people know someone with autism. We can learn a lot about the experiences of people with autism by talking to friends and families of people with autism. It is a truly humbling and eye-opening experience.

How do I access the app's data? A. Get the context object that has been created. This context object allows you to get and set the data that has been stored in the app. Q. How are images captured? A. The camera app reads the image that has been taken and stores it in the file system. It creates a representation of the image on the device's screen. It also saves the image to the app's internal storage so that it can be accessed later. This is how the image is captured: Launch the Camera app. The Camera app will prompt you to choose a resolution for the captured image. Highlight the camera button. Tap the camera button. The camera app will display the captured image and allow you to choose a resolution. Move the image slider to the desired resolution. Tap the screen to take the image. The screen will display the image that has been captured. The camera app will store the captured image in the data storage. If there is not enough available space on the device, the camera app will overwrite another image file. Q. How are images
