When she asked him his name, he smiled and said he was Tom Jones. Not only did he have a nice smile; his face lit up the room. When he spoke, his voice was melodious, soft and smooth, and when he moved, it did so in a graceful way that made her think of elegant dancers. Hannah Martin was driving the old Vauxhall Cavalier and the sun was shining on her straw hat. The heat outside was like a cushion which prevented her from feeling the icy November wind. The March wind was stirring the treetops and blowing small birds' dust across the road. They were going to have a happy Christmas and a nice New Year. February was almost over now and it was time to start working a little harder. She opened the garage door and took her step-ladder. It was going to be hard work, the walls of the new house were very thin and she knew there was a lot of timber from the old barn on the work site. Hannah pulled out a bar stool and sat down to make herself a coffee. It was not her favourite time of day but it was her turn to mind the shop and the customers. She opened the till and
