October 17, 2007 IMMIGRATION FROM GUATEMALA - IMMIGRATION OF INGALINAS Guatemala's inmigration of its citizens to the United States has been slower than expected. The largest migratory route to the United States for Guatemala is currently through Puerto Barrios in the north of the country. But this year migration is down - by almost 11%. At the end of 2006 the figure was 746,000 people. This represents the lowest level of inmigration since the war era. The decrease of the last year is not only due to the "low". The highest rate of inmigration, in the last two years has decreased even by 100,000. Only in 2005, more than 1500 people were being deported from the United States daily. In 2006 immigration was and it was largely estimated to be around 200,000 people. Most of them have been deported from the United States before the time of their expulsion. Even though they are not now resident in the United States, there are still some who reside there, but they are not allowed to enter. Migration from Guatemala has been high in the past, but it is interesting to notice the difference in the rate of the two last years. In general, the primary drivers of migration from Guatemala are poverty and
