Q: How to save the automatically generated session_cookie_age cookie in a Tomcat server? I realized that the session_cookie_age cookie of an user of my tomcat server (web app in the browser client) is not saved in the server (I also checked with the debug tomcat 5.5.30) i.e it is created when the user arrive first time in the tomcat server and is not updated if the user comes back again after some time, thus if the user deletes the cookies of his browser and tries again with my webapp he will be shown a blank page and he will have to login again and after he give cookies from his browser to the tomcat server, I think that the domain of these cookies should be the same as the domain of the web application but it doesn't seem that it happen (the user see me for the first time with a blank page, after he give cookies to the server and then the server don't change the session_cookie_age cookie accordingly, then he will be able to access my webapp with his cookie and see all his webapp content). A: I think you forgot to add a welcome-file URL in web.xml: "... a welcome
