This article outlines some of the basics of using Photoshop as a beginner. 1. Opening Photoshop First, you need to open Photoshop. This is a free program and can be downloaded from Adobe's website. There are plenty of ways to open Photoshop. Here's one way: On Mac, click "Macintosh HD" in the disk pane on the left side. On Windows, click "Program Files" in the disk pane on the left side. In the Downloads section in the center, right-click "Adobe Photoshop CS6" and select "run as administrator." Then click "ok." MacOS and Windows both ask for the administrator to confirm the installation of the program. You are prompted to accept the terms of the EULA (End-User License Agreement). In general, the agreement is pretty straightforward but addresses things like the product and its use. In the case of Photoshop, the product itself states that: You may use it only for your own non-commercial purposes. However, the EULA also states the following: To download, install and use software, you may be required to agree to additional terms and conditions as well as any performance standards or usage limits imposed by your Internet service provider. (If you are charged by your Internet service provider for the software, you must be provided with a copy of those terms and conditions, any performance standards or usage limits.) Here's Adobe's website with instructions on how to install the Photoshop CS6 program. 2. Choosing a Theme Once Photoshop is open, you can choose to work with your image using any of Photoshop's three available themes. Each theme offers a completely different interface. The default theme is the Photomerge and Content Aware options, but we can change it in Photoshop's Preference window. Start Photoshop by either: Clicking the file name (example: "Wedding.psd") in the Layers panel on the left side of the Photoshop window; Or if you already have Photoshop open, click the "Window" icon located on the top right side of the Photoshop window (the icon with three vertical bars). When you first open Photoshop, you'll see a dialog box with your name and "Photoshop CS6" in the lower left corner. That's the Photoshop preferences dialog box, and it's where you'll change your Photoshop theme. Click the "Edit" button

Wren School The Wren School is a historic school building at West Main and Lynch Street in Wren, Maine. Built about 1884, this Queen Anne-style structure served as a school until 1973. It now houses offices for the Wren Village Land Trust. It is one of a small number of surviving wood-frame school buildings in the state, and one of a small number in the state with a Queen Anne styling. It was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 2002. Description and history The former Wren School is located in the village center of Wren, at the northwest corner of West Main and Lynch Streets. It is a large -story structure, roughly square in plan with a central turret and east-facing gable. It has sash windows, and is covered by a low hipped roof with several gable-roof dormers. A single-story porch extends across the front. The interior of the main block has a single large classroom, and is otherwise plain. The turret houses the main entrance, which has a steeply-pitched gable with a period wood surround. The school was built in 1884, and served as a school until the 20th century. It is one of a small number of wood-frame school buildings to survive in Maine. The period is a combination of Italianate and Queen Anne styling, typical of rural schools of the time. This school is the only one with an intact interior (the library in the school is closed due to air quality concerns). It was formally listed on the National Register in 2002. At least, for a while, anyway. The 28-year-old singer and country music singer/songwriter/actress is on a break from husband Carey Hart's real estate training program, and she's relaxing at home with her newly adopted foster dog, Spike. "My three-year old son is the light of our life," she said in an interview with Access Hollywood. "He's my world." After their breakup, the couple moved in together for a few months, but then they fell out again. "We had a pattern of going through one thing," she said. "I'm still really upset about it. We just can't hold on to this relationship. We knew it was going to end soon and we kept calling it off. We would just go to a restaurant and sit for hours and hours. It's like starting to date. It was fun, but we weren't ready for that yet. We just kept going to restaurants and eventually got tired of it. He's the love of my life, he's my everything.
