Hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) is the fifth most common malignancy in the world. The recurrence rates after surgical resection are still high due to late diagnosis, and hence patients are treated with a dismal prognosis. The aim of this study is to analyze the data of patients with HCC treated at the Yale New Haven Hospital (YNHH) from January, 1994 to January, 2002. Fifty-one patients were analyzed. Only 7% of patients were candidates for hepatic resection. Mortality (60%) was significantly higher in patients treated with hepatic resection than in those treated with transarterial chemoembolization (TACE) (10%). Survival after hepatic resection correlated with disease-free interval (DFI) and liver function tests (LFTs). For patients with a DFI > 12 months, survival was comparable between patients treated with TACE and hepatic resection (DFI: 43 versus 41 months; p = 0.86). TACE may offer a minimally invasive treatment option for patients with a DFI > 12 months and normal or near normal LFTs. An aggressive approach to patients with HCC beyond 12 months is questionable. Longer DFI and good performance status in a patient with normal or near normal LFTs may help surgical decision making.In a wireless communication system, several base stations may serve areas within a city, state, or a country
