This is a question that needs to be asked. Simply put, as the playoffs approach, many fans are frustrated. In many cases, those who've remained loyal to a team are at an all-time low. Plus, fans are not clamoring to see the matchups. Honestly, I think the top teams tank their last games of the season, knowing that they want to save their best for the playoffs. Should the NHL consider having all of the first round matchups done at the start of the season to see which teams start the playoffs on a strong note? I think this would've gotten a lot of support in the past. Of course, there would be questions of some having to play a series of 5 games (or more) at one time. However, I don't see this being an impossible proposition. I think the first week of the season, every team would play at least once. Based on the schedule, it could be possible to have 8 or 9 games on a single day. Then, teams could rotate on a given weekend through the first 2 weeks of the season. That would allow for some of the teams to play more than once a day. I'm not saying that I'm a fan of tanking, but I think it would give a team more of a chance. Imagine a Chicago Blackhawks team that played 8 games in the first two weeks and finished with more points than any other team. I'd be more excited to see that. In fact, it would've allowed for an unrivaled first round for the team that got a top 3 seed. I don't knowl fit would get overwhelming for players. It might be nice to see a team have a better schedule for the first round of the playoffs.Q: Can you pray without opening the mouth? Many sources seem to state that the explicit reason for not opening the mouth in prayer is because it is a sign of God commanding the mouth to be open. As such the Rabbis teach that one may pray in the absence of need to
