We suggest that you use Photoshop for some things and the other graphic design tools available (see Figure 10-4). Figure 10-4: Be careful using Photoshop alone if you're concerned about image quality.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention is generally related to an injection molding machine and, more particularly, to a heat dissipation system of an injection molding machine. 2. Description of the Related Art An injection molding machine usually comprises two slides. FIG. 1 shows the schematic structure of the two slides for an injection molding machine. A power source is coupled to a control system to provide power to the two slides. If the two slides are closed, a mold is positioned between the two slides. A set of injection molding tools is then installed between the two slides. An injection unit is installed between the two slides. The injection unit is coupled to an injection die in which molten material is placed. After placing the molten material in the injection die, the material is cooled to form a molded product. After the material in the injection unit is cooled, the two slides are open, and the molded product can be removed. A cooling station is arranged to provide cooling oil to the molded product. The cooling station is coupled to a cooling channel of the injection unit. Referring to FIG. 1 again, it can be seen that many heat dissipation structures are used in an injection molding machine. The power source is typically a motor. Two bearings are used to connect the power source to a shaft of the motor. A bearing of the shaft is usually connected to a bearing of the cooling station via a pipe for heat dissipation. A heat sink is attached to the bearing of the cooling station. The motor is usually arranged in a cup of the bearing of the cooling station. The bearing of the cooling station is in contact with molten material during the molding process. Therefore, the bearing of the cooling station is easily damaged by the molten material. One heat dissipation structure has a cooling station connected to a bearing of the power source via a pipe. A heat sink is attached to the bearing of the power source. A power connector is connected to a power supply for power. Therefore, the power source can be easily damaged by the molten material.
