Correction: The original version of this article incorrectly stated that UPS broke down at the scene of the fatal accident. It should have said UPS personnel were on-site but not immediately able to help when the accident occurred. FAIRFAX, Va. — A UPS pilot died when he crashed a Sikorsky S-92 helicopter into a wooded area of Fairfax County at about 2:40 p.m. on Thursday, officials said. The pilot was not immediately identified. An FAA spokesman told Patch they were investigating the crash. Vitamin A metabolism and hepatic microsomal hydroxylation of pentachlorophenol and p-nitrophenol in streptozotocin-diabetic mice. Two experiments were conducted to study the metabolic disposition of pentachlorophenol (PCP) and p-nitrophenol (p-NP) in streptozotocin-induced, insulin-deficient (ID) mice. Vitamin A requirements are twice as high for ID mice as for mice maintained on a sufficient diet. The major determinant of the increased requirements is increased metabolism of beta-carotene to vitamin A. The present studies were designed to assess whether the increased vitamin A requirements in ID mice alter the absorption, metabolism, and excretion of these compounds. There was no difference in the rate of PCP absorption in ID and normal mice; however, PCP conversion to vitamin A was significantly decreased (P less than .001) in ID mice. The rate of metabolism and excretion of vitamin A were also significantly diminished in ID mice after oral administration of PCP and p-NP. The findings indicate that ID mice are vulnerable to the toxicity of PCP and p-NP and suggest that diabetes should be considered as a predisposing factor when evaluating the toxicity of these compounds.
