The rewarding effects of morphine have been demonstrated in human and rodent studies. However, the increasing use of opiate-based medicines such as methadone and buprenorphine has raised the concern of their potential abuse and dependence. In the present study, we evaluated the acquisition of place conditioning for morphine using a conditioned place preference (CPP) paradigm. Furthermore, we attempted to attenuate the morphine conditioned place preference using catalepsy as an aversive stimulus. The results demonstrated that rats developed a significant place preference for the opioid conditioned place. Pretreatment with the dopamine D1-like receptor antagonist SCH 23390 (0.0125, 0.025 and 0.05 mg/kg, s.c.) attenuated the acquisition of the morphine conditioned place preference. The catalepsy effect was administered immediately after injection of the cataleptic doses of ketamine (15 mg/kg, i.p.), MK-801 (0.1 mg/kg, i.p.) or SCH 23390 (0.0125, 0.025 and 0.05 mg/kg, s.c.) prior to the place conditioning test. Subsequent exposure to the catalepsy aversive stimulus (15 mg/kg, i.p.) significantly attenuated the morphine conditioned place preference. The catalepsy effect can be attenuated by prior administration of the dopamine D1-like receptor antagonist, SCH 23390, which suggests that dopamine D1-like receptor mediated pathways may contribute to the catalepsy aversive effect.Q: Titanium SDK 3.1.2 iOS
