in the beginning, 50 cent used his g-unit catalog to build his public perception, releasing new material at the end of an album cycle. he reached a breakthrough with his 1999 album, get rich or die tryin'"bad news, thats whats up!, which featured guests such as eminem and nate dogg. the album peaked at number one on the billboard 200 and went on to sell 10 million copies in the u.s. "a lot of people were apprehensive about g-unit releasing material so soon after the introduction of 50 cent," said anthony decurtis, the author of hip-hop wired: the evolution of music media. "eventually, that was seen as an admission of their star power." 50 cent has wanted to rap since he was a child, but the emerging battle of life and death on the streets of new york meant that his music was relegated to making short appearances on local radio stations. at the age of 14, the son of a funeral director in nearby brooklyn was shot seven times while riding a bike, and just before his 17th birthday, he was hit by a car. he also was accused of spitting on a store owner, among other things, and had several girlfriends. each of these events greatly affected him. but 50 cent still had a chance to achieve his dream, and from his position as the renegade king of hip-hop, he aimed to be the one to pull off the feat. it's the second song on the album that encapsulates everything great about the record. it's both a rap-rock epic and gangsta anthem, both of which 50 and eminem do extremely well. joe buddens ever presence on the mic is felt as 50 enters the verse, but banks and young buck have their fair share as well, with the former dedicating his first verse to his former schoolmate. and even the song falls to a halt to let em give props to the biggest legend of all, dr. dre, whose phantom appearing from out of nowhere to rap the pre-chorus makes this song than this recording.

its largely similar to the massacre. it features many of the same beats, but the continuity of the album is a bit more apparent. last u love is the closest cousin to the massacre. however, while there were some songs that i loved on the mixtape, i loved more on the album. im pretty sure ill give it a full five stars. and the album has a few song that are just a bit more mature than anything theyve done before. the special guest on you know my steez is nas. and i feel like one of the better songs on the album is when i die by mobb deep. this is exactly what i was talking about before. it features a subject matter that is unimportant. its not about the streets or rap (thats why the song is so successful), its about a man and woman who have been through so much tragedy and who are at the bottom of the barrel. is there much else of this about out there? were they on kelly rowland? you can really become caught up in the only to get a real look in the life of the characters. and, i was pretty honest in saying that 50 gets the flow. he sounds great on this song. 50 cent has been schooled in the business by numerous managers and industry executives, and his approach to having his songs released as singles was influenced by the stories he heard from them. 50 cent will sign a record deal if he believes that the label will distribute his music, he said. "if i'm not happy with the distribution terms, then i'll just stick with my own company." 50 cent attracted the attention of several label executives when he was signed to g-unit records in 1999. at the time, g-unit was a short-lived, upstart label affiliated with what was then columbia records, and 50 cent was the label's first signing, following the footsteps of west coast rapper tupac shakur, who was signed to death row records. 50 cent was well liked by his colleagues, and even his critics gave him credit for being the first rapper to take better care of his image than was the norm. "all we knew was 50 cent," one death row executive, ely seidan, said. "he was the most aggressive manager. he would always listen to artists. he could get the best out of anyone." 5ec8ef588b
