A huge fall-off followed my review of Lightroom. I'm sure it's because Photoshop was so good to me, and there were so many new features in the latest version of the application, that I was so excited about it I couldn't help but show the version of software I was using in my Lightroom review. While Photoshop has released couple of updates since Lightroom review, I haven't had a chance to look at them. I do this review because Photoshop is still a great image editing program - it's packed with the latest features, has excellent tutorials and all-in-one workflow, and works extraordinarily well on the iPad. In Lightroom you can do a lot of the same, but it's silly you need two apps to do things you can do in Photoshop with one app. Adobe Photoshop is certainly the most popular post-processing, (pre-production), image-editing application. It was the first to be available for the iPad Pro.

I'm not doing a review of Lightroom because it's not the application I use for any of my workflow. I use Photoshop because it's my editing program of choice and my favorite part of using the iPad Pro. I looked at Lightroom for the purpose of this review when it was first released for the iPad Pro and have been using it since Apple reintegrated it into the Apple Pro Applications. At first, I was really dubious about using Photoshop on an iPad, and that was mainly because of my love of Adobe's apps (and Lightroom) but it was a labor of love because it was such a steep jump from my old setup to this new way of working. I do use the tablet for everything else around my computer, but while Photoshop is an excellent example of how great apps can be for the iPad, I have to admit it takes some getting used to. I'm learning quickly and I think I'll be able to do pretty much anything most photographers do with Photoshop using a tablet.

To get started with Adobe Photoshop, click on the brush and then the Brush tool. In this example, we're going to use the Brush tool to create a darker background. To create the background, simply click on the Brush tool and then while pressing the Spacebar on your keyboard, click and drag to your desired location. Once you've created the background, you can create a design using this design on a blank canvas. In this example, we are going to do a mosaic pattern. To create the mosaic pattern, you'll need to create a new layer by simply pressing Command + Shift + N. Next, use the Screen Ruler Tool to draw out a few lines with a marker. Once you have the lines out, simply press Shift + F1 and then drag a few times slowly, releasing the mouse button every few seconds. After releasing the mouse button, place the cursor over the top line of the lines and drag until the lines are connected. This will put the lines on top of each other. Next, click the eyeballs on the image. You can start a new line by clicking and dragging. This line will be placed on top of the lines. You can create your mosaic by simply pressing the spacebar until you have created a loop and then adjust the eye by changing the shape to a star.
